

LOOMIS SAYLES NAMES MOLLY GIFFEN HEAD OF CONSULTANT RELATIONS

BOSTON (17 MAY 2023) – Loomis, Sayles & Company today announced that Molly Giffen has rejoined the firm as head of consultant relations.

Molly brings over 27 years of investment industry experience to her role, in which she leads Loomis Sayles’ consultant relations strategy and helps manage consultant relationships. She is based in Boston and reports to Maurice Leger, director of global institutional services.

Molly first joined Loomis Sayles in 2014 as a member of the consultant relations team focused on advancing and maintaining the firm’s strategies with specific consultants. In 2021, she departed to join Burgundy Asset Management as head of consultant relations and the firm’s first US employee.

“We’re delighted to welcome Molly back to Loomis Sayles,” said Leger. “Her experience and excellent relationships position us well to continue achieving the respect of the top global consulting firms while educating them on our investment capabilities and dedication to clients.”

Earlier in her career, Molly was a managing director at Janus Capital Group responsible for consultant relations. She also was head of consultant relations and led the marketing effort at LMCG. Molly was a product manager at both Pioneer and BlackRock (formerly State Street Research), where she was responsible for both equity and fixed income strategies across retail and institutional channels. She earned a BA from Bates College.

Molly replaces Laura Beckner, who left Loomis Sayles in March after electing to participate in the firm’s Voluntary Separation Program following more than 20 steadfast years of service.
