Launched on 1 May 1996, the Loomis Sayles Global Allocation strategy has an unconstrained, flexible mandate that leverages Loomis Sayles’ deep global equity and fixed income resources. It offers global diversification across major asset classes and markets, which has historically helped reduce portfolio risk without compromising long-term absolute return. The fund is managed by four tenured Loomis Sayles portfolio managers; around 70% of the strategy is typically in global equity which is overseen by Eileen Riley and Lee Rosenbaum, while fixed income management is provided by Matt Eagan and David Rolley.

“For the past 25 years, Loomis Sayles’ Global Allocation strategy has served investors with a global diversified portfolio of best ideas,” said David Waldman, chief investment officer of Loomis Sayles. “By leveraging Loomis Sayles’ world class expertise in both global equity and fixed income, we are able to provide a differentiated investment strategy to our clients that has stood the test of time.”

The Loomis Sayles Global Allocation strategy has an unconstrained, selective approach and uses bottom-up analysis across all geographies and sectors to find quality businesses that benefit from two market inefficiencies: mispricing and duration effect (the value a company generates through the compounding of its free cash flow). The fundamental equity research focuses on three alpha drivers: quality, intrinsic value growth and valuation. Together, these alpha drivers guide the team to invest in companies that offer sustainable, long-term outperformance potential. The strategy also takes an opportunistic, value-driven approach to fixed income that can provide exposure to corporate, emerging market or high-yield debt securities, seeking to create an additional engine for outperformance.
