

Christopher T. Perkin

Chris Perkin is a vice president and head of strategic relationships at Loomis, Sayles & Company. He is responsible for managing the strategic relationship team with a specific focus on business development, strategy and relationship management of strategic institutional clients and prospects. Chris works extensively with external investment managers effectively developing and broadening the firm's largest strategic relationships by interfacing with external manager selection teams which conduct manager oversight, due diligence and searches for variable annuities, mutual funds, stable value products and customized OCIO investment solutions. He joined Loomis Sayles in 2007 to direct the defined contribution business effort in the institutional services group, focusing on record keeper investment analyst teams and working with the corporate institutional sales and consultant relations groups. Previously, Chris spent five years as a senior account manager and institutional DC portfolio specialist at Putnam Investments. He began his investment industry career in 1997 at Appleton Partners, Inc., where he worked in the firm's municipal bond marketing department. He earned a BA from Hobart College and an MBA from the Questrom School of Business at Boston University.
