Alternative Minimum Tax

The Tax Reform Act of 1986 restricts or eliminates the federal income tax exemption for interest on certain types of industrial revenue bonds and other tax-exempt bonds, and makes the interest on so-called private activity bonds an item of tax preference, which, depending on a shareholder's particular tax situation, might subject the shareholder to the Alternative Minimum Tax. For those shareholders, the accompanying table indicates the percentage of the funds' tax-exempt income that was derived from such bonds.

Percentage of tax-exempt income by state

Dividend distributions, including income derived from interest on tax-exempt bonds, may be taxable under state or local income tax laws. Some states and/or local municipalities may require residents to report income received from obligations other than the state's own obligations on state income tax returns. Shareholders who are residents of such states may calculate the amount of tax-exempt income to report by referring to the following table. Indicated below are the percentages of tax-exempt income received by the fund on a state-by-state basis. Please note that the percentages listed below apply to classes A, C and Y of the fund.

Attention Shareholders with California Addresses: The state of California requires reporting to the California Franchise Tax Board interest or interest-dividends paid on non-California municipal bonds to individuals or partnerships with a California address. The filing requirement applies whether the bond is held directly by the individual or partnership, through a mutual fund, a money market, a unit investment trust, or another financial investment vehicle. The funds are required to notify shareholders by January 31 that total distributions to each shareholder and allocation of income attributable to California, Puerto Rico, Guam and the Virgin Islands will be reported to the California Franchise Tax Board.
